

University of North Dakota in 2002. Last month, Rae Ann received her master's degree in nursing. After hearing about all of Rae Ann's accomplishments, and about the adversity she's overcome, it will come as no surprise to my colleagues that she plans to continue her education by enrolling in law school this fall.

When so many stories exist about the tremendous obstacles Native Americans face—in getting an education, gaining access to health care, and improving their quality of life—it is important for all of us to recognize success stories like Rae Ann's. Not only is Rae Ann a role model for her tribe, she is an example for all people who face adversity as they strive to fulfill their dreams. I would like to extend my personal congratulations on her recent achievement, and wish her the best of luck in all her future endeavors.

U.S. AID AND TERRORISTS

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I want to take a very brief moment to speak to an article entitled "U.S. Aid Goes to Terrorism Backers" that appeared in today's edition of the Washington Times.

The allegation that American foreign assistance dollars in the West Bank and Gaza are going to Palestinian groups "working with or fostering terrorist-supporting organizations" is a serious one. The United States Agency for International Development, USAID, and the U.S. Department of State must immediately clarify these troubling reports, and I urge them to do so in an expeditious and public manner.

My colleagues should note that we already require the Secretary of State to ensure that no assistance for the West Bank and Gaza goes to, or through, individuals or entities "the Secretary knows or has reason to believe advocates, plans, sponsors, engages in, or has engaged in, terrorist activities."

I will have more to say on this issue once USAID and the State Department clarify this matter.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2003

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about the need for hate crimes legislation. On May 1, 2003, Senator KENNEDY and I introduced the Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act, a bill that would add new categories to current hate crimes law, sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

In January 2000, a gay Mississippi man, was murdered by Brett David Kabat. Tolbert was kidnapped from a Biloxi gay bar and brutally strangling him and beating him to death before dumping his body in Alabama and stealing his truck. Because his friends say Tolbert was gay, was last seen at a gay bar, and the nature of his murder was particularly brutal, it is believed that Tolbert was targeted because he was gay. When Tolbert's body was discovered, he was beaten beyond recognition with just a few teeth left in his mouth.

I believe that Government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act is a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

WORLD DAY AGAINST CHILD LABOR

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, it is with a sense of sorrow that I rise today to speak about the practice of abusive and exploitative child labor, as well as to recognize World Day against Child Labor, which occurred on June 12. Unfortunately, hundreds of millions of children are still forced to work illegally for little or no pay. The International Labor Organization has set aside this day to give a voice to these helpless children who toil away in hazardous conditions.

We should not only think about these children on June 12. We should think about this last vestige of slavery every day. I have remained steadfast in my commitment to eliminate abusive and exploitative child labor. It was in 1992 that I first introduced a bill to ban all products made by abusive and exploitative child labor from entering the U.S.

Since I introduced that bill, we have made some progress in raising awareness about this scourge. In June of 1999, ILO Convention 182, concerning the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor, was adopted unanimously in the ILO and here in the U.S. Senate. This was the first time ever that an ILO convention was approved without one dissenting vote. In record time the Senate ratified ILO Convention 2 with a bipartisan, 96-0 vote.

For the first time in history the world spoke with one voice in opposition to abusive and exploitative child labor. Countries from across the political, economic, and religious spectrum—from Jewish to Muslim, from Buddhists to Christians—came together to proclaim unequivocally that abusive and exploitative child labor is a practice which will not be tolerated and must be abolished.

Gone is the argument that abusive and exploitative child labor is an acceptable practice because of a country's economic circumstances. Gone is the argument that abusive and exploitative child labor is acceptable because of cultural tradition. And gone is the argument that abusive and exploitative child labor is a necessary evil on the road to economic development. When this convention was approved, the United States and the international community as a whole laid those arguments to rest and laid the groundwork to begin the process of ending the scourge of abusive and exploitative child labor.

As of today, 50 countries have ratified ILO Convention 182. In fact, since the ILO was established in 1919, never has one of its treaties been ratified so quickly by so many national governments.

In May of 2000, the Senate enacted the Trade and Development Act of 2000. This act included a provision I authored that requires more than 100 nations that enjoy duty-free access to the American marketplace to implement their legal commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in order to keep these trade privileges.

In 2001, Congressman ENGEL and I, along with the chocolate industry, negotiated the Harkin-Engel Protocol. This plan addresses abusive and exploitative child labor within the cocoa and chocolate producing countries of West Africa. This agreement will for the first time make possible the ability to publicly certify that cocoa used in chocolate or related products has been grown and processed without abusive child labor. This historic agreement represents a true partnership between industry and government to stamp out abusive and exploitative child labor.

In an effort to continue to raise awareness, last month the first Children's World Congress about Child Labor was held in Florence, Italy. The Congress was organized by the Global March and my good friend Kailash Satyarthi. At this conference child delegates from all across the world joined with the common purpose of discussing and raising awareness about the atrocities of abusive child labor. I would like to commend Kendra Halter, one of my constituents, from Iowa City, who was selected to participate as a U.S. delegate to the Congress.

The child delegates participated in workshops and were allowed to question foreign leaders and government officials from various countries to include the United States. The Congress produced a declaration that stressed the need for governments to take direct action combating this issue by providing free quality education. The declaration also calls for parents and youth of all countries to get involved in the spreading of awareness of this scourge.

In spite of all of these successes there is much more to be done. Currently, according to the ILO, there are 246 million child laborers in the world. 73 million of those are under the age of 10, and approximately 22 thousand children die in work related accidents every year. Abusive and exploitative child labor is prevalent in many parts of the world, including in our backyard.

In the June 10 edition of the Washington Post, the issue of abusive child labor once again made the headlines. The article brings to light the troubled life of a child aged 14 and his family as they labor dangerously in the sugar
